Hey Michael,

I'd like to invite Cabot School District to be recognized as a Safe School for 2026-27. In practice you're already there: in the most recent federal civil rights count (2023-24), the district reported no use of corporal punishment. Right now the policy on file still says "Any teacher or school administrator in the Cabot School District may use corporal punishment, provided only that the punishment is administered in accord with the following guidelines:", so the paper lags the practice.

Would the board consider adopting language that says what the district already does? That is the whole ask. A Kansas superintendent who just took his board through it told me it was easy: "a great way to harvest litigation, not to mention that zero research supports it." The attached two-page brief has the sentence most boards in your state already use, in a form the board can adopt as written. When it's adopted, the district gets the Safe School certificate and a press release it can use.

Happy to talk it through with whoever handles policy.

Anthony

Good morning,

The handbook you are referring to is from the 2011-2012 school year.

Please click here to view the current student handbook.

I hope this helps.

Hi Michael, just bumping this in case it got buried. Still after Cabot School District's corporal punishment policy and the handbook link. A URL is plenty, or forward it to whoever keeps the board policies and I'll take it from there.
